Jacob Freeman is a PhD student at Arizona State
University. His research combines modeling and broad-scale comparative studies to investigate the drivers of agricultural change, the transformation of hunter-gatherer societies into agricultural societies and how social inequality impacts the long-term resilience of coupled human and natural systems.